

leaving friends
jump in students
meeting new people
scary looking forward

Coming from primary school to secondary school I felt nervous and scared because the year eights and nines looked bigger. I also felt really happy because I would make some new friends and it would be different from primary school.

I felt really good about going to secondary school. I was glad to go to the secondary school and leaving primary school. I was glad to make new friends.

I felt really nervous about going into year 7. I knew a couple of people so that was ok. But soon enough I met a couple of nice people and I love secondary school now. It's better than primary school I reckon. The thing I like about it is it's more your choice in stuff and more subjects.

I thought the old kids looked massive and it was like starting in prep all over again.

I had been at the same primary school for seven years so it was sad to leave. I was happy to be in a class with my best friend because it would have been harder without her. I was put into a class with only four girls which made it hard to meet and make friends, but I was happy when I saw some of my old friends in another grade.
